Russia and her Allies. Marshal von Mackensen's Army is still slowly advancing in Rumania, and it is now approaching the famous lines of the reth from the south. The slowness of the advance, which is its most marked feature, may be attributed to two reasons. One, of course, is the increasing tenacity of the Russo-Rumanian resistance. The independence, if they would be a other, a consequence of the first, is that cause of friction or an undesirable the advance is condemned wholly to element in other ways. The public, at all frontal action, and is unable to employ events, will have greater confidence in the those enveloping movements which are the independence and business qualities of those enveloping movements which are the chief, if not the only, resource of Prussian strategy. On their left flank the Russo-Rumanian forces are effectually covered by the marshy delta of the Danube; they have invoked the influence of this factor in the situation to such good purpose in the situation to such good purpose in delaying the enemy's progress that they delaying the enemy's progress that they possible material is one of the most essential retain possession of Braila, from still retain possession of Braila, from which place all the grain stores must by this time have been evacuated. On their right fiank they have the protection of the Southern Carpathian Mountains. We are going back very many years so far as the postal service is concerned. This morning I received a letter pested in London on December 30th, which had taken two days and three nights to travel ten miles. To-day it is announced that the last postal delivery in Central London of will be about 4.30 p.m. This means that the scores of newspaper offices in and around Fleet street will be deprived of their evening mail, a serious consideration to London morning newspapers.

When Parliament reassembles next month it is likely that it will be asked to sit four days a week, instead of three, as in the immediate past. A busy session is forecasted, and it is possible that there may be some interesting innovations. Nothing has been heard lately of the introduction of the French system of departmental commissions, but it is rumoured that it may be introduced. Finance will pay a prominent part in the early weeks of the electors of Dublin University of the electors of Du

A FRANK ADMISSION.

Professor Friedrich Meinecke, of Friebur on New Year's Eye the mos remarkable article on the history of the war which has yet appeared in any German newspaper. Being compelled to lie about the origin of the war, and about the plans with which Germany began it, German writers generally have had to lie about all inconvenient events during the war. Professor Meinecke, on the other hand, adopts the convenient formula that it was only "in a political sense" that Germany "began the war as a defensive war," while, "in a military gense," it was distinctly a "knock-out" war iniederwerfungekrieg). Thus, happier than other German writers, he is able to tell the truth, or some of the truth, about the battle of Verdun was a failure. Professor Meinecke says that the battle of the Soame led to the conviction in Germany that it is no longer possible
